The information provided describes the basis for the "Peace Pole Spelunking Challenge" and the "PeacePreneuring Incubator Challenge". The challenge is inspired by the discrepancy between the approximately 250,000 Peace Poles believed to exist globally and the roughly 2,000 entries on the official map. This virtual campaign, which is part of a "Data Spelunking" effort, will inaugurate a "PeacePreneuring Incubator Challenge" starting on September 9th, and will kick off the 32-day "Tour du PAiX".

A notable example of a peace pole is the Pennington Peace Pole, which stands in Stuyvesant Square Park at 8 Rutherford Pl, New York. This particular pole was once a forgotten object at the Penington Friends House that had been left to decay. During the COVID-19 pandemic, an artist named Todd Drake restored the pole, seeing it as a reflection of the world's spirit at the time. He meticulously sanded, repainted, and renewed its surface, which was a solitary act of faith that better days would come.

In 2022, the restored pole was relocated to Stuyvesant Square Park, where it now stands as a "beacon for all who pass by". The pole's antipodal coordinates are 40.735° S, 106.015° E.

Peace Pole Project & History

The Peace Pole Project is a global movement founded by May Peace Prevail On Earth International. Peace Poles are handcrafted monuments that display the message "May Peace Prevail On Earth" in various languages. There are tens of thousands of these poles in over 180 countries, and they serve as a reminder to cultivate peace. These poles are often installed in public spaces, such as parks and schools, and their dedication often involves ceremonies and community events. The project promotes a universal message that brings together people of different faiths and backgrounds. The Peace Race, or "Course de la Paix" in French, is a historic cycling race that also uses a dove as a symbol of peace and was held between various Central European capitals.
